West Virginia Folk Music

a descriptive guide to field recordings in the west virginia and regional history collection

Edited by: John A. Cuthbert

Front cover: Edwin "Edden" Hammons, ca. 1940. Location and photographer unknown. From the collection of Sherman Hammons. Considered one of the finest West Virginia fiddlers of all time, Hammons was sought out by folklorist Louis Watson Chappell in the summer of 1947. Chappell's recordings of this encounter which comprise collections 77 and 81 in this volume provide the only extant record of the legendary musician's playing.

Preface

West Virginia University's contribution to the foundation of modern folk music scholarship is widely recognized. Due to the pioneering achievements of its faculty, the University became an important center of folksong scholarship in the 1920s and 30s. John Harrington Cox's *Folk-Songs of the South*¹ served as both precedent and pattern for the myriad of subsequent publications upon which folksong study is based. Various works by Josiah Combs, who taught at the University for but a few years, and Louis Watson Chappell, who remained throughout his career, are equally notable if less obviously influential. The University's subsequent contributions to the field, however, are less well-known but of comparable significance. Indeed, the materials presented in this guide offer ample proof that interest in the subject did not come to a halt with the publication of Cox's Traditional Ballads Mainly from West Virginia and Folksongs Mainly from West Virginia in 1939.² More recent research has gone for the most part unpublished and unknown despite its value to folklore scholarship. Fortunately, the fruits of much of this work have found their way into the West Virginia and Regional History Collection where they have been preserved and made available for research.

Founded in 1933 by the University's Board of Governors, the West Virginia and Regional History Collection has endeavored, since its inception, to preserve the information resources which scholars have required in the past and will demand in the future for a comprehension of Appalachian heritage. Folk music forms only one element of the Collection which embraces archives, manuscripts, maps, photographs, and a broad array of other materials of historical interest pertaining to central Appalachian history and culture.³ The Collection's musical holdings consist of some thirty linear feet of manuscripts and more than 1,000 sound recordings.⁴ Among the manuscript holdings are the archives of John Harrington Cox, who held a professorship in the University's Department of English for 30 years, as well as the records of the West Virginia Folklore Society over which Cox presided. A dedicated teacher, philologist and humanist, Cox published a dozen or so books on medieval literature before turning to folksong study late in his career. Long after receiving Bachelor's and Master's degrees from Brown and Harvard Universities respectively, in 1923 at the ripe age of sixty he was awarded a Ph.D. at Harvard. His dissertation, published two years later as Folk-Songs of the South, is the work upon which his fame rests primarily today. In the Foreword to the reprint edition of the 1925 publication, Arthur Kyle Davis has emphasized the volume's originality: "It is hard to realize today how genuinely pioneering a publication Folk-Songs of the South was . . . Not a single major publication from American sources had at that time appeared . . ."⁵ Perhaps of greater significance than its precedence, the book's editorial method "became a standard for most editors with any sort of academic interest in folksong."⁶

Another element of the West Virginia Collection's manuscript holdings, the Carey Wooster Collection, has somehow managed to escape the attention of folk music scholars despite its wealth and the reputation of its compiler. A "student-collector" under Josiah Combs, who held a professorship in the University's Department of Foreign Languages from 1922-24, Woofter was an avid folklore enthusiast whose contributions to the publications of Combs, and also John Harrington Cox, have remained the object of controversy for many years.⁸ In addition to a pair of large volumes containing song texts, some with musical transcriptions by the collector's youthful protege Patrick Gainer, the Woofter Collection includes several thousand items belonging to a variety of other folklore genres.

³The music recordings together with a large group of oral history recordings are known collectively as the "Sound Archives."

Certainly the outstanding element of the sound collection, the Louis Watson Chappell Archive might be considered the best kept secret in the field of folk music. An English professor at the University from 1922-53, Chappell is known chiefly today as the meticulous scholar who established the factual basis of the John Henry legend in his book John Henry: A Folklore Study,⁹ which remains one of the most scholarly and analytical studies of a single ballad. While his early efforts as a collector were vented in his Folksongs of Roanoke and the Albemarle,¹⁰ Chappell's major accomplishment in this area, an archive of 647 aluminum discs recorded from 1937-47, remains generally unknown almost half a century after it was recorded. Analogous in scope and significance to other great collections of its time, the archive contains more than 2,000 songs, ballads and fiddle tunes (including variants). While some of its contents are of recent origin, the emphasis is clearly upon the traditional. To date, about four dozen different Child ballads have been identified among the recordings, including such rarely encountered items as "The Baffled Knight" (Child #112), "Thomas Rhymer" (Child #37) and "The Wee Wee Man" (Child #38).¹¹ An equally impressive number of ballads from the repertoires classified in the works of Malcolm G. Laws have also been detected.¹² Of particular importance are variants of native American ballads such as "Old Early Camped at Fisher's Hill" (Laws dA 40) and "On the Eighth Day of November" (Laws dA 30) which Laws has placed in the "dubious" category. The Chappell recordings of these and other ballads will help to establish their currency and distribution, and consequently their authenticity within the folk tradition. The archive also provides a valuable record of traditional Appalachian instrumental music. Small amounts of banjo, guitar, and fife and drum music complement a generous quantity of fiddle music. The collection contains the only known recordings of the legendary West Virginia fiddler Edwin "Edden" Hammons.¹³ Altogether the archive affords the researcher the rare opportunity to explore a diverse and untapped primary resource.

The Chappell Archive was acquired by the West Virginia and Regional History Collection in the early 1970s. The inception of the "Sound Archives," however, dates back to the early 1950s when curator Charles Shetler conducted a series of interviews ¹³One of the great West Virginia fiddlers of all time, Edwin Hammons (c1870-c1953) was the dominant figure in east-central West Virginia fiddle music throughout the first half of the twentieth century. Legendary for his eccentric lifestyle as well as his musical prowess he was the bearer of a musical tradition which still flourishes among his survivors. with local personalities of interest. Recorded materials were accessioned intermittently over the next two decades until a formal attempt to consolidate and expand the collection was made in 1973.

The size and significance of the Sound Archives increased dramatically in the ensuing years. In addition to the Chappell Archive, notable musical acquisitions of this period include the Cortez D. Reece Archive of Afro-American music from southern West Virginia recorded during the early 1950s, and the Kenneth Carvell Archive of sacred music from the state's northern rural churches dating from several years later. Meanwhile, there was a concerted effort by the Collection and Thomas Brown of the University's Division of Music to conduct current field research.

Efforts to catalog and index the Sound Archives's musical holdings began in the fall of 1973. Employing the Library of Congress rules for cataloging aural materials, a manual with specifications for the creation of a card catalog was prepared by the University Library's bibliographer in the spring of the following year. The staff of the West Virginia and Regional History Collection implemented this system immediately, and their efforts continued until 1977, during which time some 120 collections were catalogued.

In 1978 a proposal to enable the Collection to continue its cataloging efforts was submitted to the National Endowment for the Humanities. The Endowment awarded a grant of $54,389 with the stipulation that the method of cataloging be reexamined and either modified, or reconstructed altogether, to create a more effective system. The Sound Archives Development Project officially began in September, 1979, with a planning phase undertaken for this purpose.

With the advice of consultants and correspondents across the nation, it became evident that computer-based systems offer tremendous advantages to conventional means of cataloging. Guided by a modern emphasis of folklorists as well as the interests of a popular audience, designs for an effective computer program began immediately. The underlying principle behind the system which resulted is the preservation of the integrity of each "performance session." All sound materials are catalogued by recording events, thus avoiding the divorce of items from context as cataloging systems have often done in the past. Briefly described, the system calls for each musical selection within the Sound Archives to be placed in its proper chronological context within a recording session, or "collection" named after the performer(s), or event which has been recorded. Each collection in turn is placed chronologically within the "archive" of collections secured by a given folklorist/collector. Within this framework, archive and collection descriptions provide background and contextual information concerning the recording sessions and those involved while musical selection annotations offer bibliographic references, key topics, verse-refrain statistics, performance media, and archive locations. Additional information fed into the computer includes names, places, subject references, and alternate (standard) titles, as well as verse and refrain first lines, all but the latter of which appear in a comprehensive general index.¹² The data base which is created during the cataloging process serves as an effective complement to this guide due to the computer's ability to perform rapid searches and collations which might otherwise consume months of unassisted work. For example, a list of songs pertaining to coal mining performed by Blacks from a particular West Virginia county could be generated almost instantaneously.

Many years ago, in an introduction to a publication of a similar nature,¹³ Arthur Kyle Davis isolated a pair of "fundamental problems" of folksong study which seem to be as relevant today as ever: What exactly is a folksong, and how are the different types of folksongs to be distinguished? Fortunately, the first of these issues has not been a factor in compiling this guide as it is simply an inventory to the musical holdings of the Sound Archives as they exist. As one might expect when dealing with field recordings of folk music, non-traditional materials are encountered with a frequency directly related to the various collectors' motives and methods. The Chappell and Reece Archives for example contain a high incidence of traditional music which was for the most part recorded in a non-traditional setting. The Carvell Archive on the other hand affords a glimpse into a traditional setting which admitted an eclectic blend of old and new repertory.

¹²First line listings in computer printout form are available upon demand.

¹³*Folk-Songs of Virginia: A Descriptive Index and Classification*. Durham, N.C.: Duke University Press, 1949.

The second matter, though somewhat attenuated by the particular cataloging approach employed, was not so easily sidestepped. The collection-oriented system eliminated the need to place each item in a mutually exclusive category, yet some simple means of describing the nature of a given song within the annotation codes was deemed desirable, particularly in cases where no published version could be located.

After a review of classification systems currently in use around the country revealed little consistency, a list of thirty key topics, being adapted primarily from the works of Laws, Davis and several others in conjunction with the LC subject headings, was devised. The key topics, represented by Roman numerals (I-XXX) are inserted parenthetically, directly after song titles in the annotation codes. These topics might appear singly, as in the case of a simple children's song (III), or in combinations where a variety of elements such as love and lovers (XIV), murder (XVII), and tragic death (VII) come into play, as they do in the case of "Barbara Allan." The key topics also appear in the index, along with a broad range of additional subject references.

As a special aid to the researcher, one key topic, instrumental tunes (XII) has been subdivided into four types, XIIa, XIId, XIIs, and XIIlt, denoting airs and song melodies, duple meter tunes, six-eight tunes, and triple meter tunes, respectively. Additional formal features alluded to in titles or by the performers such as "Breakdowns" or "Waltzes" are noted in the index as well.¹⁴

The effectiveness of the Sound Archives computer system led us to contemplate its application to other materials in the West Virginia and Regional History Collection. As the method is equally suitable for written as well as it is for recorded music, we hope to apply it to our most important manuscript materials. A computerized catalog to the Sound Archives' oral history holdings is already underway, consisting of archive and collection descriptions plus detailed indexes which provide a high level of accessibility at a fraction of the cost in time and labor of transcription. By employing the same program used in creating the music catalog, both the oral history and music data bases can be combined for the execution of search routines.

The Sound Archives computer system is effective yet flexible. As such, the system might be equally useful to other archives with or without the means to employ the full benefits of the program. The system will function effectively at any level of thoroughness which facilities and potential research value might dictate. While implementation of the program in its entirety is a costly and time consuming endeavor, an informative catalog consisting basically of archive and collection descriptions could be compiled with only modest resources. Any such catalog, of course, would be compatible with the Sound Archives data base as well as those of any other archives which might choose to employ the program. West Virginia University would be pleased to make the computer system available to any who express an interest in our method.

Without the direction, guidance and assistance of many individuals, this project could never have reached a successful conclusion. As principal investigator of the Sound Archives Development Project, George Parkinson is not only responsible for conceiving and administering the project but also for the existence of the Sound Archives in its present form. Richard Kuznicki, staff programmer, ably provided the computer wizardry the project demanded. Other important contributors were Mildred Moyers, bibliographer of the West Virginia University Library, and John Core of the University's Music Library. Special recognition is due to project consultants Alan Jabbour, director of The American Folklife Center, and Joseph Hickerson, head of The American Folklife Center's Archive of Folk Culture. Student assistants who have worked on the project include Lisa Stout, Cindy Burack, Burt Thompson, and Michael Shannon. Thanks also go to Dr. Robert F. Munn, Dean of West Virginia University Libraries, for his advice and encouragement, and to the National Endowment for the Humanities for its interest and support.

Finally, the deepest debt of gratitude is extended to the scores of West Virginians who have graciously shared their musical traditions over the decades with scholars from the University for the edification and enrichment of others.

Directions For Use

Catalog

The various archives, each comprising a series of recordings made by a given collector, are listed and described in chronological order according to recording date. An accounting of each archive is prefaced by an archive description consisting of a short essay concerning the history of the archive and the motives, methods and biography of the collector who assembled it. A chronological inventory of the collections within the archive follows. Collection entries begin with collection descriptions each containing a collection title derived from the performer(s) or event name, the residence of performer or recording event location, and recording date, followed by a brief description of content and other relevant information pertaining to the collection and performers. Collection descriptions conclude with a notation concerning the location of each collection within the respective archives, general recording quality, and whether or not transcriptions, notes and photographs are available. A checklist of songs or tunes within a given collection follows. Item entries begin with item titles as communicated by the respective performers in upper case print. Complete or partial titles supplied editorially are placed in parentheses. Immediately following the title, key topic codes and bibliographic reference symbols appear in parentheses (refer to keys on pages xi-xii). Verse and refrain (vocal music) or repetition and strain (instrumental tunes) statistics, performance media symbols and item locations follow. When necessary for clarification, item entries are appended with performer(s) names enclosed in parentheses.

Index

Index references relate to either entire collections which are signified by a collection number, or individual items, signified by collection number and item letter. References pertaining to entire collections include collection titles and information gleaned from collection descriptions including performer names, residences or recording session locations, occupations, ethnic heritages, religious preferences, and ages when known, as well as performance media. References to individual items include item titles and key topics, as well as additional significant subject or formal references, personal and place names, occupations, ages, and religious and ethnic groups pertaining to either performers or song characters. All item titles appear in upper case letters. Variant titles supplied by performers generate SEE ALSO references to standard titles drawn from the bibliographic references specified in respective item entry codes. West Virginia place names are indexed according to counties. Out-of-state places are listed by city (major cities only), state or county.

The Louis Watson Chappell Archive

Louis Watson Chappell (1890-1981) was born in Belvidere, North Carolina and was educated in English Language and Literature at Wake Forest University (B.A.), and the University of Virginia (M.A.). (Subsequent study was undertaken at Columbia University, the University of Chicago, and New York University.) Receiving a faculty appointment at West Virginia University in 1922, Chappell embarked upon a career dedicated to documenting and preserving West Virginia's folk music, which proved to be highly significant.

He had actually begun his study of traditional music a decade or so earlier as a ballad hunter in the North Carolina-Virginia tidewater region in which he had spent his youth. Some years later the results of his collecting in the area were published in a book entitled Folk-Songs of Roanoke and the Albemarle. (Morgantown: Ballad Press, 1939).

The folklorist's first major contribution to West Virginia folklore study began soon after his arrival at West Virginia University. Intrigued by the controversy surrounding the basis of the ballad "John Henry," and its distinction from "John Hardy," Chappell undertook an exhaustive investigation which eventually led him from Michigan to Jamaica. Articles revealing the results of his research in Philological Quarterly and elsewhere were followed in 1933 by the publication of a full-length study (John Henry: A Folk-Lore Study. Jena: Frommansche Verlag) which finally put the matter to rest, placing the celebrated steel driver at the Big Bend Tunnel in late 19th-century West Virginia.

In 1937, Chappell purchased a disc recording machine similar to the one employed at the time by his colleague and friend, John A. Lomax. Over the ensuing eleven years he amassed an archive of West Virginia folk music embracing more than 2,000 items (including variants) performed by over ninety different people.

The archive is analogous in scope and significance to the well-known regional collections dating from the same period. To date, about four dozen different Child ballads have been identified; others may remain unrecognized. One remarkable collection within the archive contains twenty-three different Child ballads including such rarely encountered ones as "Thomas Rhymer" (Child #37), "The Wee Wee Man (Child #38), and "The Battle of Otterburn" (Child #161). (An investigation of this collection, the informants' sources, and the mode of transmission is currently in progress.) The archive also contains an impressive number of ballads classified in the works of Malcolm G. Laws. Of particular importance are variants of native American ballads such as "Old Early Camped at Fisher's Hill (Laws dA 40) and "On the Eighth Day of November" (Laws dA 30) which Laws has placed in the "dubious" category. The Chappell recordings of these and other ballads will help to establish their currency and distribution, and consequently their authenticity within the folk tradition.

Instrumental music forms another important element of the Chappell Archive. Traditional fiddle music is especially prevalent, being represented in sixteen collections. Of particular interest are twenty-five discs of the legendary fiddler Edwin "Edden" Hammons who performed for Chappell in August, 1947.

Physical Description: 647 12-inch aluminum discs, recorded at 78 rpm. Collections 1-88, dates inclusive: 1 September 1937-10 September 1947.

The Chappell recordings were generally made, not in the homes of the performers, but in nearby hotels where the folklorist had set up his equipment. Thus, the place names cited in the following descriptions generally refer to the residences of respective performers rather than recording session locations.

Hundred Fife and Drum Corps, Hundred, Wetzel County, West Virginia, ca. 1930. Photographer unknown. From the collection of Jeannette Phillips Shultz. All of the drums as well as one or more of the fifes pictured here were made by corps leader Scott Phillips who appears second from right. Phillips, along with his son Bernard (fourth from right) and daughter Betty (not pictured), performed the only fife music in the Chappell Archive. The Scott Phillips Family Collection is collection 76 in this volume.

The Cortez D. Reece Archive

Dr. Cortez D. Reece (1908-1974) served as a professor of music at Bluefield State College for over thirty years before retiring in 1971. During that time he established himself as a leading authority on regional Afro-American folk music. The diverse archive of field recordings inventoried herein is the product of years of research culminating in a Ph.D. which Reece received from the University of Southern California in 1955.

Cortez Donald Reece (1908-1974) received his undergraduate education at Fisk University where he earned an A.B. degree in Music in 1931. Five years later he received an A.M. from the University of Southern California. He was subsequently employed at Bluefield State College in Princeton, W.Va., where he remained until his retirement in 1971, serving alternately as Director of the Department of Music and Chairman of the Division of Humanities. Intrigued by southern West Virginia's folk music traditions, Reece undertook serious study of regional folksong in the 1940s. His research culminated in a dissertation which was submitted in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the degree of Ph.D. in Music which he received from the University of Southern California in 1955.

The Reece Archive consists of duplicate copies of disc and tape recordings which Dr. Reece made during the course of his doctoral studies from 1949 to 1953. Though the archive and the collections within it are relatively small, nearly all forms of folksong found in southern West Virginia are represented. Reece's dissertation provides an excellent source of information pertaining to both informants and songs.

Physical Description: 4 seven-inch reels, recorded at 7½ ips, being duplicates of original disc and tape recordings. Collections 89-123, dates inclusive: c1949-c1953.

While many of the recordings were made in the homes of respective informants, others were made in the School of Music at Bluefield State College. As a rule the locations cited by Dr. Reece (and included in the collection descriptions) appear to refer to the places where the recordings were made. This, however, can not be positively ascertained.

The Kenneth L. Carvell Archive

The Carvell Archive consists primarily of recordings of gospel music performed by the choirs and congregations of rural churches in Monongalia County, W.Va., at various musical events held between 1957 and 1961. Most prevalent are recordings of the Monongalia Tri-District Sings, or "Third Sunday Sings" as they were popularly called, which were routinely convened on the third Sunday of each month extending from September to June. The archive also contains revival music, as well as informal music-making in the homes of friends and acquaintances of the collector.

Kenneth L. Carvell was born in North Andover, Massachusetts in 1925. A professor of forestry at West Virginia University, he holds degrees from Harvard, Yale and Duke Universities. Unlike the other collectors represented in the book, Dr. Carvell's collection is the result of personal rather than professional interest as he explains in the following statement:

Growing up in a Congregational minister's family in North Andover, Massachusetts, I became familiar with church music at an early age. As a youth I spent much time playing the piano or organ for church services. I was always particularly interested in the words, thought, and music of the older gospel hymns, those still included in the hymnals but no longer used by most congregations in the Northeast.

After joining the West Virginia University Division of Forestry faculty in 1953, I was fascinated to learn that many of the older gospel hymns no longer used by urban congregations were still popular in rural congregations of Monongalia and Preston counties. Thus during the mid and late fifties I made frequent visits with my tape recorder to rural churches and hymn sings. The fact that I played the accordian, was familiar with many of these older tunes, and could occasionally teach them a gospel hymn, made me immediately accepted. I was never refused the opportunity to tape music, even by the most rural congregations. These churches were proud of their congregational singing and special music, and wanted to share their talents with others. Often after the service the minister would suggest another church or musical family that I should visit, and would offer to make the contact for me.

I make no apology for the poor quality of some of the tapes. At the time these were made, tape recorders were relatively new; rural churches were not built with acoustics in mind; and electrical outlets were scarce and usually inconveniently located. I also had no idea, at that time, that others might be interested in my collection. Finally, rural congregations do not stress quietness, and much of the extraneous noise was unavoidable.

In this collection are ballad-type hymns; original compositions; tunes somewhat altered from their traditional form; and newer gospel songs, popular on the radio at that time.

John Martin, Jr., a close personal friend of Dr. Carvell, has been a ubiquitous member of the local gospel music scene in Monongalia County, West Virginia, since the early 1950s. His music is represented in collections 130, 136, 138, 141, 142, 144, 146, 150, 158, and 159 of this guide. Dr. Carvell took this photograph in the singer's rural Monongalia County home in the spring of 1958.

The Thomas S. Brown Archive

Thomas Spencer Brown was born in 1930 in Hot Springs, South Dakota. He received a Bachelor of Music Education degree from the University of Colorado in 1953, a Master of Music from the University of Montana in 1960, and a Ph.D. from Northwestern University in 1968. From 1953 to 1960 he taught instrumental and vocal music in schools located in Kansas, Nebraska, and Louisiana, and from 1961 to 1964 served on the faculty of the University of Maryland, Munich Campus, in Munich, Germany.

In 1967, Brown was awarded an assistant professorship in Music Education at West Virginia University. His teaching duties included choral methods, conducting, and various graduate level research and statistics courses. His interest in regional folk music arose soon after his arrival in the state:

Travel in West Virginia in 1967 was slow and difficult and this fact was reflected in the attitudes and interests of much of the WVU faculty. Many professors tended to look beyond the state for new developments and research interests. This seemed especially true in the performing arts. I myself adhered pretty much to this pattern until I ran across a photograph of the banjo player and folk singer, Jenes Cottrell, on the cover of an issue of the Music Educator's Journal. I had an antique banjo which had been given to me when I was a boy and had always wished to learn to play it well. So it was that when I recognized Cottrell and his sister Silvia at the Arts and Crafts Festival in 1970, I struck up a friendship with the folk artists. As had a number of others before me, I visited their picturesque home near Ivydale, and received my first banjo instruction from these two kindly people.

The social unrest of the early '70s stirred up a new awareness of the various ethnic and folk cultures which had generally floated near the bottom of the American stew. With the coming of the Woodstock Generation, the few modest folk festivals in West Virginia came to be large events and attracted thousands of young people from cities to the north and east. At these festivals, which were natural grounds for would-be folk musicians of all kinds, I became acquainted with serious students of folk art as well as the folk artists themselves.

Following the suggestion of Richard Duncan, dean of WVU's Creative Arts Center, I communicated my interests in regional folk music to Dean Robert F. Munn at the University Library, who strongly encouraged me to contribute to the small collection of field recordings in the Library Archives. Some travel money and released time was made available. I borrowed a Uher recorder from the Civil Engineering Department, and began my field collection in earnest. The following summer, I was awarded a Summer Fellowship from the National Endowment for the Humanities for the study of folk music; a generous grant from the West Virginia Arts and Humanities Council covered travel expenses for the next several years. The collection of field recordings continues at this writing.

T. S. Brown

One outgrowth of Brown's interest in regional folk music has been the creation of the folk music program in West Virginia University's Division of Music. Another outgrowth began in 1975 in the form of an innovative music program for public schools. Funded by ESEA Title IV-C, a program of Appalachian folk music for grades K through 8 was developed and tested in the schools of Webster County, W.Va. This demonstration project ran for four years, received state validation, and has now been implemented in the schools of four other West Virginia counties..

Physical Description: 32 five- and seven-inch reels recorded at 7½ ips. Collections 160-180, dates inclusive: 23 October 1970-18 July 1972.

In all, the Brown Archive embraces more than one hundred collections (and twice as many reels of tape). Only the earliest twenty-five have thus far been fully processed. Work on the balance continues. In the meantime, access to the archive is provided by a card catalog system.

St. Stephen Baptist Church, Shriver, Monongalia County, West Virginia, 1982. Photograph by Thomas S. Brown. From the West Virginia and Regional History Collection, West Virginia University. Sunday worship service at the church is characterized by spontaneous praying and chanting testimonials and by continuous music. The St. Stephen Baptist Church Collection is collection 172 in this guide.

168. IVYDALE INFORMAL COLLECTION. Ivydale, Clay County, WV, 24 September 1971. Accompanied (banjo, guitar) and unaccompanied instrumental (banjo, fiddle, guitar, harmonica, mandolin) music performed by Ira Mullins (fiddle); Lee Triplett (fiddle); Harvey Dixon (fiddle) and Herbert Pitzer (banjo) of Lindsborg, WV; an unidentified harmonica player; Ray Ketchum (banjo) a pre-med student at West Virginia University from Charleston, WV; Ed Bowes (Guitar) of Charleston, WV; Patrick McClintock (mandolin) of South Charleston, WV; and an unidentified bluegrass band. The quality of tape 9a is extremely poor due to speed variations; only the first portion of this side has been processed. According to Brown's notes, the unprocessed footage includes banjo, fiddle, guitar, and vocal music by Gen. Custer Sherman, and fiddle music by Boogs. On side 10a, Pitzer demonstrates his clawhammer banjo technique. Tapes 9-10, quality good to unintelligible, notes and photographs available.
