EDITOR'S PAGE

The production of Volume 83 of the West Virginia Law Review has been in both a timely fashion and in keeping with the quality reached in recent years. This was achieved not through the efforts of any one individual but rather the combined efforts of a number of concerned individuals. It has been my good fortune to head an organization with so many dedicated and concerned members; it is to those people, the board and staff of Volume 83, that I give my most generous thanks. Without their effort and their concern, none of this would have been possible.

I would like to thank Professor Forest J. Bowman, one of our faculty advisors, for his counsel, his understanding, and his compassion this year; he has earned nothing but the highest respect from the board of Volume 83. I would also like to thank D. Lyn Dotson and John W. Fisher for their continuing interest in the Review along with their support and their counsel; as former members of the Review their experience has also proved invaluable. Dean E. Gordon Gee deserves thanks not only for his advice but also the effort and drive which he has put forth in his determination to make not only this Review but also the entire College of Law one of the best in the nation. Finally I would thank Kim McIntyre, our secretary, for her invaluable services in preparing our manuscripts for the printer; at times she has taken the worst copy and magically transformed it into the best; while some might consider such a role minor it is truly essential in order to achieve a timely publication.

The board of Volume 83 wishes the board of Volume 84 continued success in producing a timely, quality review. The editor-in-chief for Volume 84 is Carmin D. Grandinetti.
