INTRODUCTION

David G. Harlon*

These articles on Constitutional Revision are the first installments of the papers presented at a symposium held in Morgantown, May 9 and 10, 1969, under the sponsorship of the College of Law and the Institute for Labor Studies of the West Virginia University Center for Appalachian Studies and Development, funded under Title I of the Higher Education Act of 1965.

The remaining articles will appear in Volume 72 of the Law Review. This symposium and the publication of these articles represents the continuing effort on the part of the College of Law to keep actively involved with the legal issues facing the state while carrying out the primary objective of educating the future generations of lawyers.

We are not advocating any particular method or form of constitutional revision. We have only attempted to present the alternatives available in light of the experience of others. Hopefully these articles will be interesting and helpful to those among the big concerned with the issues of constitutional revision.
