STUDENT BOARD OF EDITORS

James Clayton West, Jr., Editor in Chief
James Dennis McDermott, Associate Editor
Thomas Evert Parrish, Associate Editor
Robert Gail Perry, Associate Editor

Gary Herndon Athey
Louie S. Davitian
Anthony George Halkias
Jerald Elton Jones
John Joseph Patch
John Lee Robertson

Clarence Robert Schaub
Larrick Bruce Stapleton
Joseph Scott Tharp
Thomas Joseph Whyte
John Franklin Wood, Jr.
Merl Donald Wright, Jr.

Contributing Editors

Robert George Dorsey
Daniel Leo McCarthy

Gregory Daniel Gracy

William O. Morris, Faculty Editor in Charge
Louise F. Winterbottom, Business Manager

STUDENT NOTES

HOT CARGO CLAUSES AS A DEFENSE TO UNION-INDUCED SECONDARY BOYCOTTS

As a general policy it has always been the traditional practice of American trade unions to render each other mutual aid and protection during strikes.\(^1\) Of the arsenal of means available to implement this general policy, possibly the most effective weapon of support has been the sympathy strike or secondary boycott based upon a refusal to patronize or handle unfair goods.\(^2\)

The classic unfair goods situation, resulting in a secondary boycott, often arose in this manner:

The employees of plant \(X\), having become embroiled in a labor dispute with their employer, would strike the plant. Materials produced by plant \(X\) would subsequently be received at plant \(Y\), a customer of \(X\). Under union inducement, the

\(^1\) Mills & Montgomery, Organized Labor 20-21 (1945).
\(^2\) Id. at 581.