THE COLLEGE OF LAW.—The College of Law opened in September with an attendance of ninety-one, or seven more than last year's enrollment. This increase is in the first-year class which numbers forty-four as compared with thirty-six in 1921.

There has been no change in the faculty since the last issue of the Quarterly.

The construction of the new law building is progressing steadily and it will be easily completed next summer. The opening of school in the new law building in the fall of 1923 will mark the forty-fifth year of the College of Law.

THE VALIDITY OF TRUSTS FOR ACCUMULATION UNDER THE RULE AGAINST PERPETUITIES.—Projects for the posthumous control of property seem to have a most profound appeal to some deep-rooted instinct in humanity. In a noticeably large number of cases it seems that men successful in amassing large accumulations of wealth become obsessed with the idea of perpetuating to utmost future time their amassed fortunes. Perhaps the iron-hearted discipline with which, as is popularly supposed, they apply their lives
